This book was made possible by the contributions of many generous friends and supporters too numerous to name here. Seniors from the Publishing Class helped edit the stories of their younger schoolmates in the 9th and 10th grade Art Class. Thanks to Asmait Abrahman, Abdul Aljamal, Mueen Albanieh, Leonardo Benitez, Perla Diaz, Dagoberto Fernandez, Jessica Madrigal, Pujan Mapchan, Raj Mongar, Hiep Nguyen, Phuong Nguyen, and Elvis Nguyen for their insightful editing! Thanks also go to Kareem Morshed, Trevor Stafford and Ms. Sailaja Suresh for their valuable technical and design support. Thank you to Nathanel Asefaw, Azucena Cuevas, and Andrea Hernandez for doing all of the audio recordings on the movie extension of this project. Thank you to the many students who created the art exhibit that accompanied our book launch, especially Madhavi Dahal, Jose Flores, and Cecilia Ramos for their leadership. Thanks to Cynthia Nelson at Minuteman Press of Berkeley for working with us to make a beautiful book. Thanks to Mr. Toby Rugger and Ms. Jen Kelly-Dewitt, our 9th and 10th grade English teachers, for teaching the students how to tell stories! And thank you to Amy Sonnie and the Oakland Public Library for helping these stories reach a public audience.

Imagine you are 14 years old. Hormonal changes, pimples, self consciousness -- the works. Now imagine that all that is the easy part of being you. For you are an immigrant; you have left your home and friends, you don't know anybody at school, your family is split between two countries, you don't know your way around your new city, and you don't speak English.

When I began teaching at Oakland International High School, I had lofty ideas about the world events and issues I would be able to discuss with such an international mix of students. I too am an immigrant; I left Vietnam as a refugee when I was a child. But what I quickly realized stood between us was a language gap wider than any ocean. My pseudo-command of three other languages didn't even begin to cover the multitude of languages that my students spoke.

The comics project began as a way for me to better understand my students. I found that if I taught everyone a new language, governed by a few simple conventions like panels and speech balloons, then we would have a common way of communicating that allowed students to surprise me. Over the years, as I learned to ask them better questions, my students have surprised, informed, inspired, and moved me to tears with their stories.

And these stories are just the tip of the iceberg. This year, an 11th grader named Bao rewrote the immigration story he did for me as a 10th grader. The original story, shown on these two pages, is undoubtedly beautiful but maybe just a little generic. Bao told me that the first time around, he was shy about sharing with other people the personal details of who he was. The second time, he said, he opened his mind a little more. He had more experience, and he reflected more deeply about his characterization. Bao's second version is on the pages that follow. It's a fantastic story about childhood, adolescence, and nostalgia that reminds me of Rob Reiner's film Stand By Me or François Truffaut's The 400 Blows. Here is a young man who is becoming a storyteller; he is learning by figuring out what his own story really is.

So when you read these stories, remember that they are the first attempt by a person still forming his or her identity in an environment and language that is not native. Look deeper to imagine what more surely lies beneath. Look forward to picture the future of these teenagers who have already experienced so much. Recognize in them their great potential.
On Sunday, children in my village went outside and played many games. We caught fish in the river. It was fun but I didn't get any fish sometimes.

If the day was very windy, we made a kite or bought a kite elsewhere. And then, we would fly our kite in the sky.

Also, we played a game called hold and seek. One person had to find another one to win the game.

After many years living in Vietnam, my family moved to the U.S. to live with my grandfather, grandmother, and my uncles.

We went to the airport in the early morning when people were sleeping. I looked at my grandmother's face and I just knew that she was crying, I couldn't see it clearly.

Everyone felt worried because this was the first time we went by airplane. Many emotions in their faces.

welcome aboard.

It's a long trip.

New Year in my country is on different days. In this year, my New Year is Feb 4.

We celebrate by making food, playing games and giving lucky money to each other. I hope people have a better year.
In Vietnam, I lived in Vung Tau.

A statue of Jesus stood tall over the city.

Fishing was a major part of the city's economy.
I spent my days playing King of Fighters with my friend.

It was fun at the beginning...

...and sad at the end, always.

Ha ha! It's very fun, bro. Play some more.

Oh lord. It's too late.
Hey! 1340

Stealing fruits

Look around and getting away with it...

CRASH

Got it! Yeah Now run!

At home

Peel mangoo

Bang bang peppers

Yummy!

It was tasty

...was fun and more important it was free! ☀️
Good news for you guys, I bought a new MP3 player. Check it out!

Let's dance!

Afterwards, we went to the soccer field when the lights were on.

We sat there for a long time:

Lights off. Let's go home, dude.
One time my buddies and I hiked up a mountain and cut down some trees. For what? We’ll find out!

Dammit It’s too hot, man!

We carried those trees the whole way back.

Sweet Which one?

Don’t need a rest, do ya?

Was it crazy? There were up to ten of us crossing the streets with trees on our shoulders.

C’mon bab Help me out You guys

Those trees were very valuable.

Happy New Year 2007

First

We stole them anyway!! Later
When we got our visas, we sold our house and rented a small one to live in.

Using that money, we booked our flights.

Lying on my hammock,

I still went to school.
Still boring as usual.

I looked at the moon, wondering...

How is my life going to be in the U.S.?

Maybe
- Pizza
- Hamburgers
- New clothes

Or

Teacher
saying English "30°F "

I went to sleep and tried not to think about tomorrow.

Slowly, slowly I closed my eyes and fell into darkness.
Almost two years have passed but I still feel like the first time I came to the U.S.

Objective: 1+3=4+0
Agenda: Homework

Life goes on and so do I. I'm happy to be here, I wish for all of us to be healthy and successful in life.

*: I would like to thank my Art teacher, Ms. Thi. I thank her for giving me a chance to work and supporting me very much.
